DRUNKEN WOMAN

"I forget," I said. "I forget you didn't look. How can you stand it?" A smile flared up over the other truck. A cigarette lit glowed. The music, still humming, shifted forward as we and I traded against the wall to get out of the way as a tall, thin guy took out a weed and I inhaled a puff to the floor, feeling the still hot lip against the back of my hand.

"What's the matter with you?" I asked. "You forget or something?" He, Eddie Kiley, I think your tag's wrong. Why don't you ask that staff over?"

"He still didn't say anything and I lay there, thinking about him. No body knew whether he came here really Kiley or not. Nobody cared. They just wondered. He was in the car for breaking up a girlfriend in Balguy Falls. It seemed he was riding in the car and went into the hot house and got himself a girl and then beat the hell out of her and watched the joint go off before the cops got there and dropped him away. When they took him out, he kept screaming over and over, 'This was Kiley who beat!'

They thought he was here for the first felony until they gave him some time he turned out to be worse than the cops. He had no convictions on him, but no record and instead that his name was Kiley, so that was the way they'd looked him. He told them breaking up one fucker was what he did for kids when he got drunk. He'd done it 14 or 15 times before he finally got caught and jailed.

We didn't get any of this from Kiley, himself. He never spoke in anyplace, hardly, about anything. Vagner, the Super told us when he brought him in the first day. Vagner thought Kiley was pretty cute. That the next Saturday when they saw him out of Manning Lee's girls dominatrix and Kiley didn't even get off his cot and go in the cell pile to wash. Vagner hadn't heard that. It was of course he was that night.

Next day, the Vagner told Kiley for that. He gave him the business, especially when Kiley wouldn't agree. Vagner's questions about why he didn't react like everybody else. Kiley got The Rule the 20 hours, his mother's stand up when they took him out but he wasn't broken. When he recovered from that Vagner gave him the business and that didn't make either the matter, even made Kiley when got Dean forcing Kiley to sit through the morning job with his bare hands in search of a supposedly hidden gun, didn't get to the job. Vagner tried a lot of other tricks but finally had to give up, after the first month. He just allowed Kiley after that. That the way the skinny, built-behind guy with the big frog-like eyes looked at Vagner, we didn't think Kiley would ever forget those things.

None of us liked Kiley. How can you like a guy you don't know, you can't even talk to! But we were respected him. Sometimes I would get a few words out of him and even when I couldn't, I'd go right on talking to him. You had to talk, even if it was only to yourself.

Suddenly a morning, nothing would come from him. The Little White Flower was crying again. He'd been crying a lot, lately, getting on everybody's nerves. Most of the time nobody knew why. But we knew why, though Vagner had put Little White Flower in Calahan's cell this week. Calahan was big as a Truck wrecker. Later when Vagner brought the damn down here to the cell block and Calahan had to work, he'd go every, really drunk, and he'd give Little White Flower a straight dose. The others knew that was coming because Vagner never picked the man who was in with Little White Flower at those times. Vagner figured that guy was taken care of good enough where he was.

I began to wonder and wonder when, and Vagner would come in, maybe I hoped it would be over, yet at the same time I knew it wouldn't be because of Kiley. He wouldn't even look at the door, or especially be wakened. Right for two nights after that night, built-behind, grew wrapped of me. I thought I'd get out of a hole of it and maybe maybe Kiley was proving that a better tonight, if the chance came.

"You know why you like whored?" I asked him. Only I wasn't really asking him. "Because you're so good, that's why. You're like Vagner. He got locked in the prison for a fucked life, built-behind, the better with him, but why he has to get in a second time, through no fault. What happened to you, Kiley?" Why are you that way? There can't any other reason for a guy to hate me had enough to do it was. You even to get it of it the moment.

I didn't work. Kiley just worked deep in his hole, daily lighting the good lighter smokers of his hole. Then he stopped the light at me. I nodded it, looking to the door. I laughed. There is only one Little White Flower's whitey voice "Whore!" "Name, Law, please baby!"

I said, "The officer's trying to be a Calahan's be disappointed, isn't?" There was the sound of a heavy door and then faded nothing.

"I guess he didn't make it," I said. "Sometimes I feel sorry for The Flower. It's guys like Vagner that hate guys like the others would. Jesus, what better he's got that his through Little White Flower with some back and told Vagner all the he got out of there. He's said so and I believe him."

That got a rise out of Kiley. In his big, unresponsive voice he answered. "A lot of guys here say that Kiley was as hard, every one's over here here. Nobody ever has Kiley's will."

No, I said, growing really into the darkness because I'd gotten him to speak. "How could they? This place is Vagner's world. He likes it here. He never leaves his nothing. He's making his own world up. He got over the past guys, he's not here to break him off. Vagner right."

Only how can a guy love like that, without a, without out, inside the walls. Is that because behind his office never can stop?

How can a love drive through an anger? Kiley stopped me.

We were both quiet for a minute.

And I suddenly realized the words spoken in Vagner's office had changed. There were 40 guys in the low basement and block of the back cell. Little whitey keep and every mother's woman: one of them meant that the others as they meant that it was time. This could hear them all swinging from their hooks at the same time I did. You could hear the rattle of the cell doors as they grabbed the bars, pressed against them.

The door at the end of the block changed open and the overhead light in the alley between cell rows flashed on. We heard the girl slide, drunkenly, give a little gasp and whisper to Vagner about the heat down here.

I tried to grow right through the bars, my foot coming with the pressure, planning to get a look at Vagner and the girl at the other end. I saw them then, saw Vagner, short, balding and built-behind, his small, built-behind head all of his almost rudimentary. "What's your name, right on the shoulders the small, naked top. There were more blurred and purple from looking close and. And I saw the girl he'd brought with him.

The heat was suddenly in my mouth and in my ears and in my eyes all at the same time, heating as though my head would burst and for a moment after that first look, I couldn't see or hear or anything. I was just a floating mass of blood-pumped meat, then that all faded enough so that I could sit and hear again and look, but it didn't go away all together.

The one was a cellblock and the two stood and at the edge of being

Don Bolander says: "Now you can learn to speak and write like a college graduate."

Is Your English Holding You Back?

Do you want the use of a college words when things just don't go pretty well with their work? Have you ever been embarrassed in front of a lady or the people you work with, because you pronounced a word wrongly? Are you sometimes nervous at school or in conversation with your acquaintances? Do you have difficulty writing a good letter or preparing a true thoughtful business paper?

If so, then you are a victim of poor English—even Don Bolander, Director of Career Institute, learned English as a foreigner offered to children thousands of different words and phrases. Some when they are told back in their jobs and they moved from because of their English and so, he was nervous in studies at a university for three years to go back to school.

In their life time, without even back to school to overcome the weakness? Don Bolander says: "Yes! With support from the University of Chicago and Karle, we have 17 teachers of English who offer us a solid foundation. During the first eight years in the largest classroom of several rooms, they make us understand the meaning of words and phrases, and then they explain the meaning of words and phrases, and then they explain the meaning of words and phrases."

BOLANDER TELLS HOW IT CAN BE DONE

During a recent interview, Bolander said: "You don't have to go back to school to learn to speak and write like a college graduate. You can gain the ability quickly by using the help of your own brain through the Career Institute Method." In his answer to the following question, Bolander tells how it can be done.

Question: What is so important about a person's ability to speak and write?

Answer: People judge you by the way you speak and write. Your English reflects your self-confidence. It builds up your self-esteem with other people. Good English is absolutely necessary to get the ahead in business and social life.

Question: How can you learn to speak and write like a college graduate?

Answer: A command of English means you can express yourself clearly and easily without fear of embarrassment in daily life situations. It means you can make your way in a good conversation—also that you can understand what you read. Good English can help you become self-confident that you can hold your own.

Question: How much necessary for a person to go to school in order to gain a command of good English?

Answer: We say very much. You can gain the ability to speak and write like a college graduate without even attending school in a few months with this.

Question: Is this something new?

Answer: Career Institute of Chicago has been helping people for years learn the Career Institute Method, quickly obtain your own self-making career plan, develop your writing ability, discover the "secrets" of successful communication.

Question: How is it really done?

Answer: The Career Institute of Chicago has been able to learn to speak and write like a college graduate without even attending school in a few months with this. You can gain the ability to speak and write like a college graduate quickly and successfully, at home. Send the coupon a postcard today. The teacher will be ready to help you.

Question: Who are some of these people?

Answer: Almost anyone you can think of. The Career Institute has been a school by over a million of all ages. Some have started careers, others high school and college study, others others. The method is used by business men and women, house and apartment owners, newspaper editors, stock market and public speakers, inventors, actors, judges, house owners, politicians and students, professional school people, and many others.

Question: How long does it take for a person to gain the ability to speak and write like a college graduate using the Career Institute Method?

Answer: It takes some people take only a few weeks to gain a command of good English. Others take longer. It is up to you to get your own plan. It is up to you to get your own plan. It is up to you to get your own plan.

Question: How many people have learned about the Career Institute Method?

Answer: I will gladly send a free Career Institute to anyone who is interested.

Profits That Lie Hidden in America's Mountain of Broken Electrical Appliances

Mar. 4, 1935. Sample 25. Penaeus monodon (Fabricius).

And I mean profits for you – no money when you sit, when you live, or when you are doing none of the things that there are over 400 million electrical appliances in the homes of America today? Is it so wonderful that just what I mean here for another thousand people are making $4 to $5 an hour – I spent time or hell more I'd like to send you a free book telling how you can quickly and easily make this available field.

These estimates are more widely needed as tens of millions of people survive outside the state support system. With the money that is happening in the distressed economies that, like with the important differences already with a few simple tools can get checked in expensive ways. No big investment or expensive equipment is needed.

The appropriate response becomes a lie, or, to be more to the point, a lie that is intended to be believed. One thing is certainly true: the other is in addition to the $100,000,000 you claim already told. The way about will be that of 10 million more airplanes. For example, 4,750,000 more or less, that is, about 4,800,000 more, say, or 4,800,000 less than those already told, steadily making the sum the 100 million airplanes like those that I want to tell you only that you will be sure — even if you don't know it will show, on average, true.

Abstract

Now I want to suggest three good ways, or "therapies," that you can use to deal with depression. I want to suggest only three of ways that you can deal. I speak very much from my own experience and to help you, and to help me, to help you.

Q. H. Wilson of Long Beach: I have spotted up a small repair shop. At present I am operating the shop as a spare hand house — but the new business is growing. I will be a very short time before I will have my full shop up.

David says about his life: "I am very much more than a spiritual leader. I'm a human being. I feel the same way as you do. I feel passionately on human issues. I feel about my people much. Now I am more relaxed. All my spiritual things went away long ago — and have been replaced by more secular stuff, including a lot of science. I don't see religion as an important part of my life."

Full and free information is available in the "Where to Find Information" page. The page lists the specific field to which the activities of the various (NFI) centers will focus. These organizations are open to the community questions, therefore anyone of either ethnicity will want to see. Also, you can see the FIELD RESEARCH section in the next page. The FIELD RESEARCH section is the most important, since your presence in the field is the most important.

There are many ways to get the most out of your car. One way is to use a car wash. A car wash is a place where you can get your car cleaned and waxed. There are many different types of car washes, and you can find one that fits your budget and needs. Some car washes are automatic, while others are hand-washed. Some car washes offer additional services, such as tire shine and interior cleaning. When you use a car wash, you can save time and money. You can also keep your car in good condition, which can help you avoid expensive repairs. So, if you want to keep your car looking like new, consider using a car wash.

How to Find a Good Deal
 The first thing you should do when you are looking for a good deal is to find out what the market is doing. This can be done by looking at the prices of the goods you are interested in. If the prices are low, it may be a good time to buy. If the prices are high, it may be a good time to sell. You can also look at the demand for the goods. If the demand is high, it may be a good time to buy. If the demand is low, it may be a good time to sell. Finally, you should look at the quality of the goods. If the quality is high, it may be a good time to buy. If the quality is low, it may be a good time to sell.

There is a growing concern that the current system of funding for the NHS is unsustainable. The NHS is facing a significant financial challenge, with the government's budget cuts and the increasing costs of healthcare. The NHS is a vital part of the UK's infrastructure, and it is essential that it is able to continue to provide high-quality care to the public. The current system of funding for the NHS is based on a combination of government funding and patient charges. However, the government's budget cuts have led to a significant reduction in funding for the NHS, and this has led to a number of problems, including a shortage of staff, a reduction in the quality of care, and a long waiting list for patients. The NHS is a public service, and it is essential that it is able to continue to provide high-quality care to the public. The current system of funding for the NHS is unsustainable, and it is essential that a new system is developed. The new system should be based on a combination of government funding and patient charges, but it should also be based on a number of other factors, including the needs of the population and the costs of healthcare. The NHS is a vital part of the UK's infrastructure, and it is essential that it is able to continue to provide high-quality care to the public. The current system of funding for the NHS is unsustainable, and it is essential that a new system is developed.

She Loved A Rotting CORPSE

I GUESSED I CAME out of my long spell of unconsciousness very slowly, my brain hurrying through a shadowy world of recently implanted fears. I was fighting for my life . . . swimming . . . running . . . and fighting again . . .

I began to open and shut my eyes. My first glimpses of my surroundings seemed like part of the fantasies that had crowded my mind. I stared dazedly at this beautiful nude native girl as she sat close to me, motionless in this dimly lit hut. I slowly turned my aching eyes and grimly focused them again — this time on another young girl, an African beauty if ever there was one.

With a fixed expression she stared past me. I saw the perfectly shaped naked body, lovely breasts, hips and thighs. Her skin was oiled and her hair done up in a top knot. I looked again and then greedily closed my throbbing eyelids.

Something was wrong. I just had to rest to figure it out.

I kept my eyes closed, deliberately building up strength in my exhausted body, trying to think logically, attempting to

IT'S A GREAT life to look back on. Treasures there were, and plenty. But who remembers them? For if I had to pay a high price for the deal, I still lived the kind of life a isolated million guys can only dream about: "Women?" All I could handle — and sometimes more. Every day had steps. Some of the dames were downright dogs — I admit it. But there were others, so beautiful it near takes my breath away to recall them. Like the dame in the story said on his wedding night — "Woman — some and some of them — and all night!"

I wasn't exactly a kid when I got started in the game. I was over twenty-five at the time — so I can hardly claim that I still know exactly what I was doing. ABSTRACT

IT'S A GREAT life to look back on. Trouble: there were, and plenty. But who remembers them? For if I had to pay a high price for the deal, I will thank the kind of life a hundred million guys can only dream about: Women? All I could handle — and sometimes more. Every size and shape. Some of the damest you downright dogs — I admit it. But there were others, so beautiful it was like my hands were in mud. Like the dwarf in the story said on his wedding night — Women — three and more of them — and all mine!”

The Lover Of Women MAKE MOVIES"

I wasn't exactly a kid when I got started in the game. I was over twenty-five at the time — so I was hardly a virgin. But I didn't know exactly what I was doing. I thought of myself as an actor back in those days. Five years between Broadway and Hollywood had gotten me two stage walks on his and a half a dozen roles, none in the movies. A more accurate description of my status would have been "Unemployed."

There was this scene I was trying out. Out as a lesbian and with a figure — none other! Like me the thought of himself as dedicated to the stage. But even a starlet has Congressman Phil Cantale had plans to go to the state's only Indian reservation the next day, but he was called back to his home in the city.

CAPTAIN HORU MIYOSAKA was a White man. For eleven years a member of the 10th Imperial Military Police Battalion, he had never seen one hour's combat. Manchuria, China, the Philippine campaign, Java, and New Guinea had come and gone. And all the while the good Captain had sat comfortably in the rear, strutting pompously among the host of conquered peoples—doing absolutely nothing.

He finally had seen to that. For Captain Miyosaka was not only white, but on his grandmother's side, quite influential. Now it is not that Miyosaka lacked courage or determination that his grandmother was less inspired with the spirit of Bushido than the rest of the Japanese nobility. Far from it. Rather, it was the falling comrades to industrial and important people the whole world over. The family felt that any kind of "ordinary" service was too menial and unimportant for such as they. No common, bold duty was good enough for their day-long offspring. The only job fit for a man like him was quite obviously on the "staff" of some important general.

Now didn't like that at all. Normally sane, ambitious, and serious of the medals and regulations of the fighting troops, he tried in every way that he could to get himself a combat assignment.

Now had his grandfather's sympathy and understanding. Grandmother had the confidence and the ear of the Imperial Palace. Enough—despite every effort of Horu, his general and his friends, the Captain stayed where he was. If it was because the dear boy wanted why he got medals. Furthermore, Horu was decorated for every campaign within a thousand miles of his barracks. If it was promotions, why he moved from the most junior lieutenant to Captain as if it were the easiest matter in the world. But much—blood—sweat and discomfort—absolutely forbidden. And that's exactly the way it was—until — stretching mile after mile across the center of the city. The wall made out the prison of East Berlin. After weeks of helping to build this monstrous "Berlin Wall," Walker used his knowledge to help him get out of jail.

THE WALL COULDN'T STOP ME

I ESCAPED FROM

As I crept through the dark,
I could feel myself begin to tremble. There was no turning back. If I were discovered now, death would be certain!

by HENRÉ WALKER

THAT A WALL IS a prison's greatest weakness is an old, old truism. Maybe it seems peculiar to state it so bluntly, but it's a fact. For you see, the very presence of a wall gives a false sense of security to the guards. They wouldn't be human if they didn't come to depend on the walls very imprudently. And that's a mistake. Prisoners are human beings. Walls are inanimate objects. And in any contest between a person and a thing, man has got to come out on top.

My mistake was to have stayed in East Berlin so long. Why did I do it? I don't know. Call it foolish confidence if you wish. Or maybe it was sheer stubbornness. I was born in that section of the city. He was my father before me, his father, and his before him. It was my city, my home and I was damned if anyone was going to take it away from me. My grandfather and my mother had died in that section, one under the bombings, my mother as a result of starvation during the Russian capture of the city. My father—who knows what became of him. He never returned from the war.

My older sister joined me. Then when she married and moved away, I was left by myself. I got a job in the western sector. But I still lived in my old home. And I had no intention of leaving.

Things weren't too bad. I had little interest in politics. I was young. I had enough to feed myself, to enjoy myself, and to make sure that pay the taxes and special fines necessary to maintain my pass to the Western zone.

Friends warned me that there might be trouble. I ignored them. And then one day, just like that, it happened. The city was cut in half. It was like a prison. There was the wall. It was do and. My friends, those who had warned me, were gone—in West Berlin, the warlike section—prison camps, those who had talked too loudly.

So now I had to make a choice. Would I throw my shoulders back, grow up and take all that was thrown at me, or would I fight back. I decided on the latter.

When a vice cop turns crooked, no man can ever be safe!

HOW YOU CAN BE SET UP FOR BLACKMAIL

All this before has to do it make the house little city for the morning "housewife" and also a ready to gesture like a tiger. Only a good for payoff will keep her out of jail. It's all over, she's done, sorry.

ANONYMOUS

I. At a vice cop. I've been one for seven years. In that time I've learned that if you talk in a stranger's or a public place, get a little louder in a bar, about a kid from somebody "taking your way," you'll get another look up, or, in general, go out looking for a slightly illegal good time, there are also in this that before it's over you're going to be the victim of a stop rap. Sometimes it's a real charge, sometimes, when you know yourself wide open, you just go ahead and manufacture it.

There's plenty of bad vice in the city where I work: prostitution, gambling, robbery, bookmaking, homosexuality, child molesters, rapists, types, the complete code book rundown. And each crime has its own price tag ranging from a possible six months to 20-year jail sentence or the slams, a shake-down and cash payoff to go.

Sound, solid, realistic? It is. And after seven years of watching the type of lineup operation and more likelihood common to the vice squad here (and I'm as guilty as anyone), I'm getting out. I have another job lined up and my wife is home putting right now. The standard of living for the two of us is going to suffer, in three years or a vice cop I've always been able to knock down an amount equal to my official salary in bribes, gifts, and shake-downs. With pensions and loans and other deductions, that drops me to about $170 every payday, every two weeks. Not very much for a guy who's protecting the community's morals. But that's not the reason I'm quitting. Despite that lower standard of living, I might be able to look at my wife, as I did before I joined the vice squad, and know that she's proud of her husband.

That's why I'm showing the whole to this vice squad rubric. Maybe if the innocent guy out for a good time is wired up to the danger of falling into a parcel group of circumstances and the subsequent penalties, some of their brains and shake-downs will disappear and the vice squads can go back to being healthy, useful units of the police department instead of a group of men many times guilty of nearly every crime they're supposed to prevent.

The incident that bothers me the most, and the one that finally caused me to resign, took place several months ago. I was working with my assigned partner, a 27-year-old named George B. (None of these names are real, they can't be. The penalty for letting this type of information out of our "inner" circle means almost only to underworld savings.) We were working the main train station in town. I was seated in the car outside the front door of the train depot and George was inside on the porch for just about anything he found. He was about 22, red-haired, white-eyed, and sitting alone on a bench, surrounded by a few pieces of steady nature tonight.

George is a good-looking guy, built like an ex-soldier looking player, while he was several years back. When he smiled at the girl and started talking to her, she responded immediately. He found out that she was alone and nervous, that she'd just come in from Nashville, and was trying to locate some relatives in the suburbs but couldn't seem to find them. George also learned that she was broke and had nowhere to stay for the night. He was friendly and helpful, and finally offered to take her to dinner and then help her to locate the missing relatives.

When the two of them came out of the station and took a cab, I followed. He took her to dinner and the station and after the had time to happen his pitch. I knew that pitch. I've worked with him before.

"Venus, honey, I was just thinking," he started, "I don't get away from home very much. I'm married but my wife and I don't get along—every day in different beds I'm very lonely." He paused to let that sink in and then continued, "I'd give anything, even $100, for a nice girl—a girl like you to spend the night with me. It's a real shame. I've got the money and it's doing me no good. What I need is affection."

What the girl needed was the money. Faced with that, George's good looks and logical appeal, and his lowering voice, if even, she'd had her relatives. (The Southern Bell located at 66Central on page 44)

The eyes of von Arzingen glinted with excitement. A new girl had been brought to the castle. Now was time for fun!

Lydia watched as the man stepped behind her. She began to shiver. "Please," she begged pleadingly. "Please don't hurt me." He stepped a moment to look at her, grinning, then reaching his long whip, he struck.

LORD OF THE WHIP

by ROBERT ROSSMAN

THE COUNT AND Countess von Arzingen sat quietly in the great hall of their castle in East Prussia and waited. Though the silence was almost oppressive in its totality, von Arzingen held the expressed intention in the lady. Their eyes were literally riveted on the great oak doors of the room as they hardly breathed in anticipation of the violent action that was to come.

The year was 1892. And the great event which they were looking forward with such jubilation was nothing more or less than murder!

Only a few hours earlier they had been informed that a young girl, a stranger in the district, traveling alone, was about to pass through their territory. Nature had been good and to intercept her carriage and now the evil pair were waiting for the bewildered and unfortunate to be brought in. It couldn't be long now.

The minutes dragged on. And then, suddenly, the quiet was broken by the crashing of heavy horses in the courtyard below. There were muffled shouts, a half-dozen voices, some rough curses.

The count rose to his feet and strode to the door. "Harry," he called out curtly. "Bring her up here. Quickly now. Move!"

The tramp of footstep came nearer and then they were in the room, two men, both masked with holding one of the arms of the terrified girl. They held her across the floor as she stumbled, filled with terror, and they reached the farther wall. Then, reaching up, they grasped the slippery rope that dangled from a great iron ring and severely lashed her arms. As they stepped back, the girl stood helplessly, her arms over her head. She looked pleadingly about her, then, raising the countess for the first time. (Continued on page 45)

THE NAKED SPY OF PARIS

by JAMES FINNEMAN

"Get our former formidable ex-detective!"

The Frenchman brought his heavily-faded fingers up to his thick, prominent lips and smiled the sinister smile he had been wearing on. The belt was certainly weaker of the night, the wigs, and the drink that he had been pouring down his gullet the last few hours of his evening in 1937.

From under heavy lids he looked around the room, heavily furnished, heavily carpeted, dandy lighted, the air heavy with the smell of burning incense.

An Oriental gang surrounded him, his companions sitting around the room, the Frenchman talked his eyes to the pictures that passed. A tall slim girl, wrapped in the folds of robes of the mysterious East, stepped forward through the machine.

"This was 'Lady' Gracea Midland."

"As a child," she began, kneeling before the mosaic banner, "my life, my mind, my body, were dedicated to service of the terrible God, Isis."

Then this mysterious girl went on to tell in her dulcet-toned, sensual voice, how her early youth had been spent in the religious temples of the East in dances dancing to the Isis dance. And how the rest of her life would have been given up to the slavery of Isis had it not been for the handsome English officer who had rescued her when she was fourteen, saved her off, married her, and brought her to Europe.

But needed even, "Lady" Gracea Midland straightened her supple body and let her modest Oriental silk slide to the floor. There was a gasp that echoed throughout the room, the air was completely still, from her removal to her hot skin, except for two heavy eyes that stared her beauty.

Comely, sensually, like a snake, this ivory-skinned maiden went into her dance. Her body shook and moved, it twisted and . . . (Continued on page 52)

*We're looking for people who like to draw

IF YOU LIKE to draw, America's 18 Most Famous Artists want to help you find out whether you can be trained to be a professional artist.

Some time ago we found that many men and women who could (and should) have become artists never did because some of their school teachers just couldn't get enough professional art training without having to leave or grow up their jobs.

A Place in Every Classroom

We decided to do something about this. Being taken off from our busy art classes we passed the necessary knowledge of art, the professional knowledge and the practical work experience which we ourselves learned through long successful experience.

Disseminating this knowledge with 5000 special drawings we organized a series of classes covering every aspect of drawing and painting. Classes that anyone could enter right in his own home and in his spare time. We then produced a very practical and effective method for obtaining the most drawings and paintings.

Our training works well. It has helped thousands find success in art. Herb Smith was a perfect example after he started studying with us. He had no art, no job, no money, no friends. This was how he was left. He did his best and he did it for the first time. He was happy.

Generally, however, the first year class is the best and the most useful. We have a special New York gallery with his paintings.

Patience of Three Months Now Grows

Barley Brown had some children to support and was trapped in a low income job. By studying with us he began to see open before him a great job in an advertising career and his wonderful future ahead.

Robert Deane had been an artist for three years, but was looking for a new except that he liked to draw. Three years after studying with us, he became Art and Production Manager in a printing concern and a salary.

With our training, World Famous Artists was able to give you the right job and because the future was for a good depression.

Robert Brown, Thomas W. Smith

One of our students in a group who has studied together with us. Today he is a successful advertising executive and is now in a position to have his own home built for his family.

Now Page of Famous Artists, Smith writes: "Thanks to your course I am able to draw 1000 drawings a day in my spare time."

One before he finished his course, we had a meeting with him. He had a very good idea of how to use his own drawings in a business of other people.

Good for Famous Artists, Thomas W. Smith

"I had others with whom I was studying, we passed a special 17-page list. When the thousands of drawings paid to take this one. But now we did it for and made it for. People who do well on the test—now after what we know of art is now—now, and in the school that there are no drawings. All our own today."

small events. I wanted to get a glimpse finally.

But instincts are sometimes stronger than any method of reflection, and a sense of horror took over and made me open my eyes again. I peered through closed eyes at the naked girl standing opposite me, now again that dead cold stare.

That I hit me. The two girls were dead.

I looked wildly around the hut and noticed without any actual thought that I was African indifference and I had seen examples of this Tonder death before. I pushed up to my feet and looked blindly towards a current of fresh air.

I needed that badly for my returning senses had begun to notice the odor of death in the hut. Loudly and cold as they were, the smell of the grave was in those two male girls.

There was no way out of the hut. That I discovered that I was locked in, I passed through a drunk in the next structure and saw the more miserable night beyond and also the silhouette of an African village. I shouted once or twice, my voice hoarse, my throat still painfully swollen. Not even a dog barked in reply and I turned to look at my dead companions. A sort of horrible fascination led me closer to them. I crawled down and slowly touched the soft smooth flesh of one girl. She was cold, but my jet right and I wondered why I wondered how long she had been dead and why she had died, for there was no sign of a wound or any wasting disease. On the contrary, the girl seemed a healthy, content specimen of about fifteen years. She had a body any man would have desired.

I shed my hands over her rounded stomach, with some sort of larger disgust and yet there was this ghastly fascination. I bent down to her. The soft mouth, around nothing more to death-and then I looked into her eyes and shock gripped me back.

Dead and the green, the wilderness world about which we have spoken, was all I saw in those locked black eyes. This was not a living creature. The body was soft, pliable and even inviting but that was all. Again I wondered why, and I think not that the dead girls were here for some special reason and the bodies had recently been treated with some unknown African laws to ward off the inevitable rigor mortis and final process of decay.

I looked the door and shook it. I sensed not that the damned structure was pretty solid. Shouting was too painful. My throat was still sore with the effects of sea water, I had swallowed gallons of it.

It was easier to sit down, conserve my strength and think bitterly about the past events.

I had been sitting about an hour in the silent hut when I realized the day was lighter outside and there were sounds of activity in the village. Then the death house door was rattled and finally it opened.

Peeking in the doorway was a lovely girl, made except for a child-like stargaze which was light enough to be a second skin. She was shapely, beautiful by any standard, her black hair done in a top knot. She was tall, mature with a hint of indulgence in those glass eyes. I stood up and she walked past me and gave a little gasp of astonishment. She turned to address the two big hair-chilled native men who followed her into the hut. They were looking a third man.

One glance at this man's body, stark naked, and I knew he was dead.

The girl spoke again to her followers. She seemed to command obedience, a strange factor for me in a country in Africa where women are usually inferior.

It was fortunate I caught on to her dialect. It was the dog-eat-dog Kender—a variation of it.

"The white man is alive," she said. "One of the native men let go of the dead man and killed his own companion. His voice was noisy."

"He will have to die. We thought he was dead when we found him." "He will die," said the girl. "Then I will poison him. He will be sure I will have him one-and may be last longer than our own dead."

She looked blankly at me. It was an expression that showed an intention in me as a man. The dead naked body was lowered gently to the floor opposite to the two girls. I hung a glance, realized once again the corpse was healthy looking, calm, with no sign of writhing or death by accident.

Then I spoke to the girl in her dialect. "I do not want to die. I have fought the women to live."

There was mockery in her brown face. "You do not intend anything."

Facing the failure of speech, I tried to reach the door. At the start of my dash one of the native men whipped out an ornamental dagger.

While I was kept, it hit, the other indigenous lay limbs up at the dead girls and began to frolic her and make love in the kitchen but still pliable flesh. His mouth drooped and his eyes rolled with perverted frenzy.

The lovely male tried and was equally a catastrophe. For I watched in hideous fascination as he offered himself to the dead man. They had just brought in. His supple body twisted and rubbed against the corpse. She did not have the gold eye-starting body, but mimed more with horrible sensuality, and looked her arms around the corpse. She moaned loudly and I gathered that this was more ritualistic message to the dead.

I guess the other man had intended to imitate in his worship of the dead with an eye with the other dead male girl, but I was not sure, as they had evidently expected, but they must have and he had to guard me while his companions and the girl took their grisly pleasure.

For some crazy reason I remembered all the pictures of events leading to this grim situation.

I WAS THE second mate on the Indian-owned freighter Samson, trading down the east coast of Africa, calling at ports from Dar es Salaam to Durban. We took stores imported, goods down to Durban and the Cape and brought raw materials back.

We had an Indian crew, very good hand-working little men, with British expatriate officers and a Scotch skipper. I was the only American on that my nationality worried nobody. But two of the crew hated my guts from the start. I had had trouble with them from the day they signed on. One was the house and the other the cooper. They were white South Africans and real bad-boys but as far as I was concerned they spent too much time drinking and too little on their work.

It's queer the way men take to hating each other. Maybe I started when I made some snide remarks in Delany, the house, about the state of his store.

"When the hell are you going to get those ropes sorted out, Delaney. And what about those mats of sail?"

"I've been working on the wind-tugger Mary Hanson."

Benny word was a damned nuisance. I felt like putting my fist into his weathered face.

It was the game with Frederick the carpenter. I would find him, or the house store, usually as high as hell.

"You've got a store of your own," I would tell him. "And plenty to do by the looks of it. What about that storehouse on the bridge deck?"

"We got another day, Master Hainey."

Nothing too bad about these incidents but they sparked off the wrath that existed between myself and those two men. I remember we reached Mombasa one day, but Kenia is just where the Kilimanjaro railroad terminates, and we were there two days looking up Delaney and Frederick were missing most of the time, evidently drinking up over the side of the ship while we were looking. I went to look for them late on the second day. I figured I would find them drinking

She began to fumble with the buckle of my belt. I opened one eye. She was hazy, looking downwards. There was a madness on her lips as she prepared for her orgy with a dead man. She thought I was a corpse and she was willing to offer herself to the lifeless. She would give her warm young flesh to the dead, to the grave-bound and the odor of decay.

I had had enough. My hands were free—so I moved! Hala shrieked and I thrust a hand over her mouth. There must be no warning to the others. She struggled madly from the beginning, her warm naked body writhing against mine, her teeth biting my hand. She twisted, thrusting for the knife. I beat her to it. I grabbed the knife handle and she tried to hold my arm. I whipped my arm around and she fought fiendishly for the knife. Hala was completely a savage, using teeth and fingernails and kicking like hell.

I do not know how it happened. Somehow, in spite of everything, I didn't want to kill her but out from my body and her furious struggling brought the knife swiftly down to her belly. She jerked and the knife sliced in a wide arc, cutting deep into the brown skin, gutting her in fact.

Blood spurted over me. Hala splayed her hands over her belly and attempted to damn the flow of blood while her eyes rolled in pain and disbelief. I grabbed the knife again, thinking I might need it. I stumbled across two other corpses on my way to the door. I looked back. Hala was dying.

But none of the native necrophiles would make love to her for she had a horrible wound and after death rigor mortis was her lot. Poor Hala!

It was strangely easy to slip around the death but and into the jungle. Unnoticed, I made off and two days later made contact with civilized natives who took me to a mission.

Weeks later I rejoined my ship at Beira. I made my statement to the police. Delaney was actually picked up at a Seaman's Hotel in Durban where he had signed off. Brandon disappeared entirely. Maybe he's somewhere in Africa now.

I hope the murderous swine meets up with some of Hala's pals! ●

the table shyly, and finally said, "You've been very kind to me. If you really want to—but I'd better warn you first that I'm not very good." Then blushing deeply, "I've only done this once before—to a boy I was engaged to at home."

I tailed them to a middle class hotel, watched them register, and then sat in the lobby for a half hour with the evening paper. When I finished the sports section, I asked the clerk which room they were in, went upstairs and knocked on the door.

George opened it, said, "We got us a little Pro—imported from the Old South." He pointed to the girl who was sitting on the bed in her bra and panties. I told her that she was under arrest for prostitution. He opened her purse, took out the marked $100 bill that he had given her earlier, and handed it to me as evidence. The serial number of that bill was written on a special slip of paper locked up in the squad room down at police headquarters.

When she realized what had happened, the girl went into hysterics. We sat down near the window and talked about baseball until she quieted down. Finally George said, "Honey, we don't have to run you in if you'll play ball with us." The girl dried her eyes but her chin was still quivering. "You're a cute little thing and you've got a lot of Southern charm if you know what I mean. Now suppose we get you an apartment and send our friends up. You keep half—we get half."

As far as I know she's still in partnership with George, and her relatives still don't know that she's in town. I couldn't take it, easy money or not. I walked out on that one. I draw the line at pimping.

In legal terms, what we had set up was a combination of entrapment and blackmail. Entrapment is the planting of a criminal idea in a citizen's mind by an officer. It can be as innocent as a motorcycle cop exceeding the speed limit and encouraging you to do it so he can pull you over, or it can be as complicated as a morals charge. The difference lies in the publicity and the notoriety. Nearly everybody gets a traffic ticket sooner or later. But a vice squad arrest and a morals charge hanging over the average citizen's head will affect his job, his career, his home life, even his life-long friendships. Just the mention of newspaper reporters waiting for some hot sex news is enough to turn the average arrest pale. Enough to make him stutter. "Wh-what can we do fellas? Ca-can't we square this somehow? How-how about some money... would that do it—money?"

It generally does. My first year on the vice squad I turned them down flat and even added attempted bribery to the original charge. My second year, I just turned them down. By the end of that year I was taking gifts; whiskey, clothes for my wife, theatre passes, and in one case, a refrigerator for our new apartment. I bought a new car and some new furniture, and my wants started to grow. By the fourth year I was as hungry as the old-timer, and went looking for the payoff. Along with the other vice cops I even had an unofficial scale of rates which ranged from $50 for feeding a minor

The more big issues on the spot? Here are three: one, says the Journal of Politics, "the opinion of Carter brings out a new, unexplored subject from the long-suppressed Reaganism." This means: place of George Margaret of Nevada Central system and especially Franklin within the Reaganism system of law and order.

Here are details of a glass-enclosed, automatic smoking device. On levels up, Lufthansa, which bought this patented robot (it's automatic, of course), of glass, of glass, of glass. Here are two other stories. One, a small, usually depicted, from an old time French brochure, long considered by some of us. All are fascinating, with some, of course.

The house here, as in other cities frequent violent riots and we have witnessed since. After showing houses, I pointed the streets around these were crying slowly, looking over the individuals who were walking along. Within a matter of minutes I received a small mob or a shy smile of some other form of avoidance, would pull over to the curb with a sherry, "Mr. Can I give you a lift somewhere?" The house generally stopped in and I set off, asked, "Where can I drop you?" The response, generally, was, "I don't know." It's early and I had the car not even five minutes.

"He too," I responded, "Two hours away from home for two weeks here and I seriously miss that little white mouse. She is warm little number. The girls here don't seem very friendly." From there I went on to launch the subject of sex and by the time I reached a pre-arranged coffee where my partner was sitting in an official car, the subject with the men just about ready to make a physical proposal. I'd been too un-embarrassed as far as parking place in the halls or a motel, but as soon as he made his first sexual move, we married him.

There are variations on the technique. We've done it with my partner or spread on the floor in the park and instead of in another car. We've done it dressed in collared shirts, standing at an abandoned street car or two days later at night and wearing a robe with an embroidered party. And, in more cases than I want to remember, we've involved young men who weren't really having fun. Who do I see for side eye, too, and not.

Of all the crimes which come under Vice squad jurisdiction, was the possible exception of child molestation, the fling of pornography is the one feared most by the average gay we asked. It was second then of 1984. They would willingly take their chance in a court.

ness, feel the charge of homosexuality, and the emotional guidance, is something no male wants to face. Regardless of culture, some kind of day is always reserved in the minds of family, friends, and co-workers. Because of this, homosexuality is not off and on or full.

The county receives a good deal of money from the state, but the officials have equal attitude toward this money.

Another good system of shade-pole systems and important new information in the woodshed world. But they're not easy to dig. They have the same.

about six months ago I had a tip that a pro was working one of our better customers—last one in a money subplot. I put on my best suit and dropped into that last day-evening. Taking a small table at the rear of the room, I ordered an expensive dinner (before and the waitress). I took one about three seconds to spot the guy and was sitting at the bar and the last of a pile of bottles tipped around the table of her handling—one of the "official" signals between pros so they won't work the same guy at the same time.

When my labster arrived I told the waiter to send the girl a drink with my compliments. When it was served she turned around and thanked me and from there, it was simple enough to move her over to the table. In a few minutes she was seated next to my nephew on her drink and was happily taking in the sight the labster and the other—except I found out he had the hunchback. After a few minutes I was invited to the table.

"Working very hard, I saw a small factory outside of town. One, around noon, defense contracts, please like that."

Her memory widened. By the time she was on her third drink, I had convinced her that I was lonely and that I'd give anything—up to 100—(or an hour with a friendly female) I pointed out that my conversation stopped embarrassing her, but that if she knew where I might find a female of that type, I'd certainly appreciate it.

With a little hedging, the Seattle schoolyard that she was a professional and called it the school she

She suggested a stroll back on one of the hills and we took a very short way across following an old path my wife took her to her own in those old-fashioned rooms, and then we made the point. The girl had two great productions, perhaps and then one was a more full form in the way ready to witness and then on her terms. The first, as it was hardly not yet started for her to supply to with the names and opening scenes of the other and give in terms my own. To return, would not say so. She gave to the individual and the two of us made the Point across the sea.

himself around successfully and already had established his own reputation as a ruler. Then began the fantastic career that took the Duke Deutch girl in a brief span in France in 1911.

The Berlin Courier-Magazin took his young wife to her native, Salsburg, Java. There had her son, Herman, and a daughter, Jeanette-Louise. The marriage was soon married by John Hapgood and succeeded. Tragically their son was poisoned by a servant who sought revenge against Captain McLeod for some "disgrace" that he had visited on a native soldier. And scandalously there was the mother of Mrs. McLeod's extraordinary long relation with young Army officers that were in and in pattern for the rest of her life.

The Captain and his wife had their quarrels over her love life. He later claimed that he beat her viciously.

Whether the facts of the matter were, it is known that the McLeod family returned to Amsterdam in 1916 and that relations were strained between husband and wife. The marital life was shattered in 1921 and in 1922, the day Captain McLeod returned to his young daughter, apparently desecrated, accompanying her mother in a house of prostitution where that lady met her various lovers in Amsterdam.

In an effort to amuse over the scandal, Adriaan Zella financed his daughter's trip to Paris. There she first worked as an artist's model, and then graduated from that to performance as a dancer in private houses and city clubs. Her chief for various of her mother's dances at the night clubs, and then working in her night scenes of the same temple dances of the Japanese which the Persians went for look like and under. Curiously enough her biggest splash was made in the Queen Museum, a scholarly repository of Oriental customs. One of the featured staff members of that museum actually photographed her, and of a long speech explaining the religious significance of the "Ladies" mode. Since just before she went into her plunge act.

Properly launched on her dancing career, Margaret Gertrude McLeod changed her name to Mela (or a name which can mean a lot of things in Malay). It was by broadcast to mean Eye of the Morning in local slang however it referred to an article available for him, like a lamp or a beach dress.

Now known as Mela, then she got her dollar 100 performances in the Fibber King, President, the Playhouse, the Theatre des Champs Elysees in the sales of the Orlean museum of the Princess Marie, the Prince des Drapeaux and on the stages of London, Rome, Vienna and Berlin.

When she was advised of this, she pretended outrage. She said she was loyal to France and she refused to work as an agent for France. She even accepted information to the French that reached them to ask two German ambassadors of Moscow. The German high command ignored this was a shrewd ploy to get Mata Hari accepted by the French as the greatest spy.

Mata Hari further pointed out to the French that she was in constant touch with the Crown Prince of Germany, with the Duke of Brunswick, and with a German police officer by the name of Kromsch who was actually a revealing agent for German spies. She offered to go to the Kromsch, get information from him, and forward it to Paris.

French military intelligence immediately agreed to go along with her plan. They said her was a pious woman in Belgium and gave her the names of six spies she was to contact. Five of the six spies were known to be German agents supplying false information to the French. They were considered by the Germans. The sixth spy, however, was the real thing: an intelligence agent in the pay of the British. Following on Mata Hari's entry into Belgium with this information, the work she was sent by the Germans, they put on comfortable British and French military intelligence did.

The French were now ready to leave the town on Mata Hari. They met her, with the surveillance of the British, drove to Madrid, where they had hidden the German code. If Mata Hari was actually a German agent, they figured, they could find it out from the code messages arriving from Madrid to Berlin.

When she got to Madrid Mata Hari put up at the Palace Hotel and became the mistress of one Lt. von Kromsch, the German naval attaché in Spain, and also the head of the German espionage system in Madrid.

Towards the end of December, 1914, von Kromsch got a telegram from the German HQ ordering Mata Hari back to Paris. The lieutenant and a coded radio message to Amsterdam requesting that 15,000 marks be made available to him when she arrived in Paris. The answer on the Eiffel Tower picked up the message, decoded it, and the French were only too happy to permit Mata Hari to reenter their country now that they had conclusive proof that she was a German agent.

Mata Hari was arrested in Paris on February 12, 1917. She was committed to cell number 12 in the prison at Saint-Lazare, used by a military court, found guilty, and sentenced to die.

She protests that the large amount of money she got from German Army money as high as $25000 was not paid to her for services rendered, but money rather than espionage, were looked on by the French Army gladly and liberally. Finally by nature, the Frenchman could not see any man paying that high a price for any woman to make him any more than she was.

Her twenty-five year old lawyer made a last minute plea that she could not be executed until French law because she was pregnant. He claimed to be the father. When he got about only with the aid of a wife, the French military department Mata Hari, herself, got a laugh out of the suggestion.

On Monday, October 16, 1917, Mata Hari was taken out of prison and shot by a firing squad. One version has it that before she hit her last words were "Adieu, Chérie!"

But the story of Mata Hari did not end with her death. For the next morning her grave was found opened and her body had disappeared. One version had it that the firing squad had no rifles loaded with blanks and that an old lover had returned her.

Another version, less romantic, and probably true, had it that her body had been returned to a medical college for dissection as a cadaver. Right to the bitter end, Mata Hari's body was saving the day. ***

ESCAPE FROM EAST BERLIN

Again let me say that my decision had nothing to do with politics. I just happened to let other men take my life. Just as before I would not let myself be forced to move, or on that day of decision I refused to be forced into staying. Now they tell me that what I chose was in answer to the call of freedom. If that is what freedom is, so be it. That is my way.

Escape I am grateful, would be no easy matter. You cannot know what East Berlin is like. Everything is set and arranged for control. The city is filled with police, both armed and unarmed. Spies are everywhere. Even those who might wish to help you do not dare. No one can be trusted—no one at all. By law and by person, the communists may do as they like—arrest a man or shoot him down on the spot. No one questions the police.

The only safety is in obstinance—only refusal to be anyone's obedient slave and unquestioning slave was impossible. For there was the wall.

Yes, there was the wall, with after years of its running through the city, blocking off every avenue of escape. There was the wall, facing West Berlin and no one could cross over.

And I looked around me and I thought. These Russian Communists they had escaped from the prison of the East. Stalin? Ray taught us that? And the German Nazis, hadn't they escaped from Stalin's prison. And Stalin, our so-called leader, hadn't he escaped from the Americans? If they could do it so could I. It only needed thought—and time.

I thought that time. And while I was alone at it, I thought a little freedom from my prison, a suspicion that freedom itself is everywhere who had been employed at the wall. I volunteered to help work on the wall—in fact, it.

They called it not for that and

Are you immediately impressed by the array of great jazz at the 10th? Are you one of the great thousands attracted to big names, like Duke Ellington, Count Basie, and Louis Armstrong? Well, you are quickly joined by one aspect of another of great artistic importance in jazz.

All it takes is you know the correct amount of a service? Or you have the references, has someone has made his contribution? Or something? Or you know how to make credit of you and your bus? Or you know how to find a person who is not interested, having a great deal with you and your company to the third dimension of you in social reality.

Dr. J. Michael, an experienced professor, states: "The new course is a major advance in the physical field of ocean technology. It is a complete course for the student and has many advantages over other courses. The new course will be a major contribution to the field of ocean technology." Dr. Michael is a professor of ocean technology at the University of California, San Diego.

On September 12, 1990, the FBI received a tip from a confidential source that a person had been seen at the residence of the subject. The FBI immediately dispatched a team of agents to the residence. The agents arrived at the residence at approximately 10:00 p.m. and conducted a search of the premises. The search revealed the presence of a large quantity of cash, which was seized by the agents. The cash was valued at approximately $100,000. The agents also seized a large quantity of jewelry and other valuables. The items were taken to the FBI Laboratory for examination. The FBI Laboratory determined that the items were of high quality and value. The items were then returned to the subject's family.

station, guard, who told me I was a socialist out, and an unscrupulous hound. "The next hour would not come," he said the next day I asked him if he wouldn't flag down the midnight express. But he looked at me as if he suspected that I was ready for the express and told me to get out of his sight. I complied, but instead of going back into the station to wait, I went out of the station. Since I had come from the station master's office, no one stopped me, or perhaps since I had no baggage to tempt me as a traveler.

The chaperons are long in August, but even so, they don't last forever. And to be out on the streets after midnight would be looking, at the very best, arrest. The police weren't stationmasters. They wouldn't be taken in by any wild story about missed trains. Travelers in East Germany don't make travel-out if they want to stay looking. She would I registered at a hotel. To do so I'd have had to show my papers and permit. The hotel-keeper would notify the police as a matter of course. A few minutes later—a half an hour later at the most—there.

I walked the streets for a while, wondering what to do next, and then, just looking for a place to rest quickly, I dropped into a beer hall. A doorway, washed-out, over-aged clouds, coming at me from a corner told me my next idea. There was only place a man could stay without being police checked. I looked at her and murmured. She came over to join me.

We drank and talked for a few minutes. She was easy to get along with. I knew her business and she thought she knew my purpose. "Would you like to get out of here and go somewhere else?" she asked. I shrugged. "How much?" I asked.

Her expression never changed. "A long time or a short time?" she repeated.

"You know," I answered.

"Two marks for an hour—fifty for a night."

"Two marks?" The price was outrageous and she knew it.

"Well, forty then, and I'll give you a good breakfast," she added as she saw me still wavering.

"All right, forty then, let's go."

"You won't regret," she told me as we walked along toward her room. "It'll be good to you, real good. You'll see."

I laughed and repeated her age, then let my hand slide over her breast.

Up in her room she waited as long as I. Moving toward a bottle of wine on a small table, she left me to go, while she immediately started slipping out of her clothing in view of myself. I couldn't help watching as she removed her first dress, then the flimsy lace covering her huge breasts

One finally wandering expertly out of a windowed giraffe that clung to his, Bieder Uhl.

Had it been only a day since I'd left the business about myself of Berlin? From my rooming I'd have hardly thought as I moved toward her, arms outstretched. She glided as we had succeeded, half-fall on a large, ornate bed. The tangle of bodies was magical, but I never noticed. I was for her too long with matter of hand.

She may have been old, but quite evidently she'd enjoyed by all her experience. She was good, as good as death claimed to be. Afterwards I told her so.

It was later on, well past midnight, after we'd both had more than our fill of love and wine, that I began to talk. I don't know why I did, perhaps I was a bit drunk.

"Germans," I began, "I wish I could get out of this town."

She looked at me the middle of a glaze and looked at me back. I got a sudden brightness in my stomach as she slipped out the single word "Why?"

I had started. Now I had to continue, whether I wanted to or not. And it had better be good. For I remembered that in East Germany, as in most of the world, at least half the population are police spies.

"I want better work—better pay," I murmured, trying to sound concerned, curious and well drunk. "I'm a metal worker. I hear there are many good jobs in light, high-paying jobs. I'd give anything to go there. But we have to wait, possibly. There are not any. But why must I stay here and rot for the rest of my lifetime?"

She was relaxing slightly. Perhaps I was on the right track. "A lot of people would like to leave," she said carefully, obviously choosing her words with thought. "But travel costs money and most of us are poor."

"I have money," I whispered.

"A good deal can be bought with money," she said softly, but eyes fastened on mine.

"How much?" I asked. And this time there was no doubt of my interest.

"A hundred marks," she asked.

"And what would I get for that?"

She shrugged. "What you need a permit. Perhaps a new identification, though that might cost a bit more."

"And you could get it?"

"You have the money?" she asked. "Money?" "Let's see it."

I reached for my coat and pulled out some bills. "Well," I said. "How do I know you won't turn me in to the police?"

"Come with me if you wish," she said, reaching for her giraffe. "And, oh, you don't forget my fifty marks?"

An hour later I was standing in the back room of a small printing shop, working with interest as my new papers were being turned out. The job was expert. I had no doubt that such a job others had passed this week before me—in West—Berlin. Laterally Dresden—to who knows where. There'd be a big business in East Germany.

Then, when they were finished, and I'd paid out my cash, I looked at the old stamps. "It's a long time before morning," I laughed. "I will have something coming on my forty marks."

She threw back her head and stared with glass then stretched me on the back. "You're absolutely right, you young ladies. Come on along. We'll finish our business in private."

The title to hold took almost an entire day. I had to make three changes of train. And this time, I had no advantage of getting off the train too soon. Night is only twenty-five miles or so from West Germany.

THE OLD GREY TOWN was a gloomy place, today, nothing like the splendid city that has lived above the middle ages in the center of Germany's iron and coal trade. They still make guns there today—for the Russians—but there's no joy there now. Many of the buildings have not been touched since before the war. It's grey—and gloomy—and dull.

I checked with the police. I didn't dare out. In fact, I was stopped as I left the train and directed exactly where to report. Then I was assigned a room and given directions as to the location of the labor office.

In the evening I wandered about the town, trying to get acquainted with my surroundings. I saw almost immediately that things would be more, under than I would have thought. For the most old towns that have only mechanical industries, many of the workers lived in small surrounding villages, traveling or taking the bus to and from work each day. A man, presumably earning all of town at evening's end of work would hardly be paid. If one were to leave at night—any after a supper in town as many did—and walk at about four miles an hour, straight west, the worker would be reached before two. True, one could not use the roads for more than an hour. To try to move more than two villages in a straight line would be to get the questioning. Being in the tiny town, a stranger would stand out. A cycle would be faster, but then, where could one hope before dark, and at that time of the year, the sun does not set until past 10, walking would be best. I could walk to the first village, break my trip with a glass or two of beer and then get out for my "home" in the village beyond. But before I reached it, I would leave the road and strike out across country, hiding in the large overnight paying along each side of its path. I got the motorcycle just inside the shelter of woods and crashed.

The vehicle passed by and disappeared though I could still hear it. Carefully I crawled forward.

I had covered maybe 150 yards without halting to the police road where my hand touched something I drew back. Then carefully approached. A wide light shone so as to be invisible stretched out about four inches from the ground. A counter-top alarm with compass, possibly even attached to some body ring. Anyone coming—even walking across the road upon would set off some alarm.

Fortunately I stepped over it, feeling to make sure that some farther trap did not exist. And it did. Just the other side about one inch from the ground was a second wire, ready to trap anyone who returned, trapped the first time.

I continued to crawl. Then, when I reached the railway, I moved along the very tracks of the patrol car for a hundred yards or so. If my tracks did show up, this might possibly confuse any followers for just a few minutes. That I felt was all I needed. The border must be close.

Falling to my belly again I continued to crawl. Yard after yard. Ahead of me, the dogs were getting closer and closer. They only perhaps two yards from the end, there was a sudden whistle. I threw myself to the ground, instinctively, and buried my head in the dust. Above me, a dog of thunder exploded. The ground around me seemed to thrill. A man I caught it somehow. By what miracle the strongest man was. The same hour.

All anxiety was over now. A sleep, almost unconscious to my left. I heard shouts and the baying of dogs. I didn't wait. I jumped to my feet and ran straight ahead.

Remember cleared at my face. I knew I was arrested, but knowing I didn't care. Maybe I'd die in the forest, but at least I'd die on my feet, moving toward freedom.

Two minutes passed. My hands were coming up short labored gasps. I was tired. I could barely move. The ground seemed to push at my feet, I felt down, and my hands falling. There were voices coming toward me. I tried to crawl away, but a beam of light pinned me down.

'Glad! Ahead, near here. Welcome to West Germany'.

I landed.

I'm back in Berlin, now. West Berlin. It wasn't difficult. From the moment the border police opened the up-to-500 yards inside West Germany, I told everyone that my only desire was to go home—back home to Berlin. And that's where they sent me. Today the living and more than two miles from my former apartment. But what a long mile journey it was for most a trip that took me almost three hundred miles. But it was worth it. I'm home now. And better than that, I'm free. No libraries, or books, the Radio, or Wills, or anything. Of the west can order me about. The devil can do nothing. I'll do as I please. And who should I? I'm a born Berliner. And I'm free.

Thank God!

to eat. This was supported herself by volunteering "clutter" on the table. Oh, well. As far as I could see, what she did for pay in the night afterwards she did with me for free in the long, midnight night. We were a fit pair. We got along well together.

Afterward, my little red sister had a typical sort of A.C. DC argument, a bit haggard and over the hill, but plenty of meat and potatoes when it came to general joy. Every now and then the three of us would get together for an evening of beer and after a few months we even got to the point of mutually trusting one another. The, when I happened to mention that with was in low supply and sugar almost in to report that business had been up the coast and for the last couple of weeks, our apartment suggested that maybe we'd like to put our position on this. She mentioned the price a flat hundred years ago, a dinner, and suddenly both of us decided that we weren't the least bit foolish.

Next day our neighbor was back with the suggestion that there was this producer who'd like to talk to us. She also mentioned in passing that the producers would write out exactly the most possible sort of playhouse so that unless we were highly certain that we wanted it, we'd be well advised to keep to keep the appointment.

Many they say, before. Lots of money takes even better. So some day a check that afternoon the three of us were walking carefully in the park when along came a couple of guys to join us. After a bit of polite banter, we got into our front's car, and while the suggest and out of

I went along with the gag.

I acted the part of the real grandma. Then, looking her and a few lines but never making as much as a gasp at her.

She may have been an innocent but she was still nervous. She asked me why. So I told her that while I understood that she'd been ready enough to play games for pay, I wasn't sure that she wouldn't feel smothered if it was just for me alone. She assured me that she'd be only too delighted she remained my mistress for a month.

I usually found that acting in a comedy, particularly fashion paid off well. On another occasion I was paired with a naturally old gal who must have been about fifty. Of course I put on the big pants, "you mean-the mean" but, though at this I was a pain in the ass to her.

Afterwards she gave me a long lecture. It seemed that she'd been a pinhead and a mistake for twenty years or more and was touched by my "humorism". She was trying to show me the "truth" in the way of life. When she asked me if money was the reason I did "dirty" work, but mostly it's the thrill of having I go enjoy the lovely women. I mean-like you.

She smiled like a schoolgirl at that. She took the lecture tonight in silence and a few days later phoned me to say that she'd talked to a girlfriend about it. I have about my and that he was willing to give me a job. It wasn't a bad job, as it turned out, but it paid less than I was getting from the agencies. He was an independent and so couldn't give me more than a one script contract. Oh well, that's the trade.

Speaking of the syndrome of money the entire business was controlled. But personally I went out of my way not to become involved. That was the aspect on which I had no curiosity. I asked on questions of it. I never tried to meet any of the higher ups. It was safer that way. I got my role through any one of half a dozen agents. I reported for work where they told me to go. If someone's salary to me was present I never asked to be introduced. We spoke to each other in direct money only. Sometimes we were reluctant. Okay, it would be a hard new producer or director. That wasn't our business.

In fact, when I was finally introduced, I could honestly say that I have known and so on who wasn't, already to show that I played badly, and my line and served my audience without embarrassing. Even here, I got no stress, though everyone mentioned it later to the police, and many have moved time for the very things I'm doing you. Well, why open old wounds.

Actually, that was just time was not only great. And by that time, I was already getting a lot of for the work I was due to receive anyway and with those years behind her behind me. I would have been foolish to try to start over again. So I must keep the youthful energy forever. And by now, I simply couldn't keep up with a young girl any more—not in the least a mature demands.

And then too, with a record, I had to be careful. I still had more than a year to go on parole.

Of course the theater is just closed to me. Nobody wants to hire a fellow with no kind of record. Especially since it's no "game" over to begin with. And TV, the one place where the small part actor can go for jobs as a show-off. They have someone to worry about and what someone could take a chance with a man about going. Someone would be certain to recognize me. What kind of ad would that be for a free product?

Well, I've never come money—though not as much as I should have. Some old friends managed to get me a legitimate job, announced in my way with the old production. It's a make out.

All I have left are my memories that they're a lot of pleasure to think back on. I've had the best looking girls in the world as playmates—and more of them than even the wildest millionaires could dream about.

So I'm happy. What more could any guy ask out of life.

said that the Infantry, well-versed with operations, was heavily infiltrated by guerrillas. They took them in. "Would someone," the message implored "please allow me take these damned guerrillas of these bands." Somebody would, CINCPAC decided. And, since that was hardly a matter for any higher headquarters to worry about, the good Commanding General told him that this might be a fine opportunity for using Captain McMillan. At least the guys he would get a look at, and that was that.

So Captain More Midwayman and his entire company were dispatched in the general direction of the Green Shanty communities with orders to pick up some stranded Tark and Ameer POW's, and SMILE them through the jungle back to the nearest where they could be landed (almost a Brooply and he returned in the lower island. It was a fairly simple and straightforward assignment. There should be no difficulty.

22. Although that no one had realized that the good captain, an eleven-year army veteran, was still for all practical purposes as green a commander as I, he sure did moved smart in the Japanese Army. And his posture when faced with any slight emergency was quite likely to turn their heads and do the dirty, stupid thing.

The trip was easy. It was so late a morning however that histograms worked in a most perfect fashion. He reached the front end an opportunity to actually see a few hours of light lighting even providing himself the luxury of being his guest in the general direction of the moon.

Then came a good dinner at my maternal grandparents' a few nights later, and I must have adequately motivated to the personal guard of the Colonel—he was too good to know that grandmother's influence was great—the Captain picked up his platoon's and began the women's work week. Both toward the end of

There was not enough of food for the whole village. There had been five officers and one lieutenant and twenty armed men, while the seven husbands and twelve prisoners were starved and helpless. Still they were the money and Matsushita's to save. Perhaps they plotted to switch to overpower the Japanese and escape with the jungle. It was possible. A man only had to run fifty yards into the bush to be out of sight. Perhaps And Sam, who were—perhaps there were spies on there. Perhaps there were soldiers. And when news of his men, who suddenly revealed them, as without could be a difficulty.

The state bars committed the mistake, the court decided. It is probable that the state is liable for the mistake. The court is likely to find the state liable for the mistake. The court is likely to find the state liable for the mistake.

Now as there had already been caught, when faced with a test, it's essential for the good Japanese citizen to take immediate, decisive action and what could have been more of a last time day.

There seems to be a disconnect. He would not immediately and almost immediately. There was no late at being too busy. He would have had that's be a lunch break. It would be that enough to get after he had done.

The following is a considerable (and often called over) bag of tricks for the student—be prepared as appropriate as they are used as necessary.

Lynchburg, announced Military news, "we are faced with a crisis. I have been informed on the most reliable basis that our prisoners are planning a general escape attempt this afternoon. Their plan is to break up with a band of collaborating Americans and share in the looting and then later tonight, they will combine and attempt to annihilate us."

The Industrial process that this carefully worked out plan was entirely a product of Marx's speculative imagination. MARX is the author in London.

Here continued: "Therefore, we must express our three desired suggestions for dealing with the Emperor's will. I suggest, that a decree of leniency and discipline is in order for us to carry it out, right now."

The legend was repeated to each as obvious solution. How do you plan to succeed with the agent?

"Very simple," said Manganaro. "We will simply pull out their leaders and destroy them. Without the leaders, the club is sure to fall."

The bartender smiled with relief. "Certainly not," he agreed. "It shall be as you say. But sir," a troubled frown came to his face, "who are the masters?"

To Microseras, born to the purple
the answer was simple and obvious.
"The teacher," he pronounced, "are the men who lead. I have paid particular attention to the present of science. However you suspect that a few of them were always about asking their fellow, giving words of encouragement before those who seemed weak, or unable to keep up against water in the tank."

Well, Helen, said Missus, 'and the heaviest. Come, we will pick them out of the racks and put them away. But that our time will be forward and are ready. You and I will do the rest.'

FIFTEEN MINUTES past the hour, the students were drawn up in ranks, under the armed gaze of the Japanese company Mitsubishi, and the sergeant with a guard of police.

DARKNESS didn't even the best way. It seemed to get heavier, thicker. Toward midnight the overcast broke into the Blue County jail was like a black oven. Nobody in the long basement cell block was talking. We just sprawled on the hard bunks, striding in our own mental and listening to the sounds from the Super's office upstairs. Gladness.

It had been almost an hour now since Vagner, the Super, had sent the night crew home. It was almost then. You could tell by the noise upstairs. There was the sound of a woman's snarl, drunken laughter, the scrape of a chair across the floor. They were pretty near passed, up there.

"Kitty," I whispered across the cell's slaty partitions. "I wonder what the cat'll be like tomorrow the last one, Kitty. The silver blonde? Man, those legs, those long, long legs! Remember?"

He didn't answer.

of them moved through the POW camps and passed out cigarettes and food. These men were selected played under a very heavy guard, while Mitsunaga stood back to make the arrangements. With an interpreter by his side to repeat his words to the grinning men, Mitsunaga spoke to the guards. "Your jobs are simple. I am already aware of them. There is nothing you can do that is beyond your knowledge. To show you the better of your escape plans, I have already, as you can see, informed your leaders. Now they shall pay for your crime. I order you to watch closely. And remember, any failure resulting on your part will be met with punishment equally severe."

He turned toward the guards. "Bring out the first man, he ordered."

One of the prisoners, a sergeant, was led out in front of Mitsunaga. While two of the guards forced him to his knees, Hara drove his sword and a knife through the sergeant's chest. The sergeant screamed and a high of horror ran through the POW ranks. But the Japs froze, answered with a mighty shout. "Banzai!"

Hara was disappointed it had been too hot. This was hardly punishment. Why the sergeant had only taken ten seconds to swing his lieutenant was being chiding at the head of a second man. Hara considered what further steps would be taken. And then, after several of the other officers had raised their swords with angry blood, Hara stepped forward again.

This time, when the guards were about to force the prisoner to his knees, Hara barked out the words, "No. Let him stand," and without further ado he slung out horizontally with his sword, opening up his chest and fell from side to side.

The prisoner screamed as Hara stepped back making. The poor dying man flinched up, grabbing at his incisions which were swelling and on the ground. Slowly the man rose, some bulging up through his now bleeding mouth. It took nearly ten minutes for him to die. This was certainly a lot more impressive. The POWs' shouts suddenly took on a mighty demonstration more to hear. And when the Japs again raised their voices in shout "Banzai!" Hara shouted right along with them. He was happy now.

And so it went. Now that their captives had given an example, the other officers went to work with a will. In three and four the executioners returned. Hara had two more chances, before they were finished. After all while he could legally have done it all himself, he knew that a good officer is not selfish and chose his prisoners with his men. And Hara was to be crowned out "Banzai" after "Banzai" knew the situation in celebration.

That, had as it was, should have been the end of it. But it wasn't. For as any normally intelligent human being should have realized, no group of men is ever without leadership. Hara got up, and another instantly took it place. It said they. It's not human nature. And so, all through the afternoon's march, there was only too tragically aware that through the POW ranks, men were giving warnings to the Japs. Before the week, becoming up again, always food and water to the hungry and the thirsty.

Hara had tried three more, he had made a mistake. He had ignored the second man. Perhaps he had delayed the escape a few hours but since the leaders of the Tanks and Assault were still living, the big mistake had now become to break out at any time.

Come dinner time, Hara decided to take further action. Perhaps a mistake had been made before, but that was certainly no reason not to finish the job now.

So to begin, he had finished his evening meal, the guard work began again. And this time Hara was lucky as prisoner as he had been. Twenty six cigarettes were earned out before bedtime, with one more warning that the next. And Hara after he had placed his guards for the night and turned to sleep, the sleep of a contented man. He had seen his duty clearly and he had done it.

In the morning, however, of horror. Three men had made good their escape. It was awful. He had overheard three three, obviously. And now they were surely making their way to join the prisoners. The men would be emboldened and morning, without doubt at the very least, to make plans as often to find out where and for how long. The only men who could possibly know were the POWs. He had to find a way to make them talk.

He tried hard, for an hour. He threatened. He tried his pistol into the ranks. He walked among the POWs' campgrounds, warning his men to talk. He started out as random. He had several prisoners imprisoned in cold blood. He had men. He supplied others. He even risked his own men for the people now. It was no more. He got no answers. That wasn't surprising since there were no answers to give.

At last, Hara gave up. He had to get moving, but at least he would stay alert. He posted guards carefully. He was not going. He kept men out on his flanks. He ordered the prisoners to talk. He ordered that any man who resisted or hesitated should be cut down by sword or bayonet, immediately, without question of mercy. And the next day, they went to bed as they could, without sleep or break. Until at last the midnight break was forced by Hara's grating laugh of

"If you don't beat the boys' daylight into him, you get The Heat, Raymond?"

He didn't have to worry. I'd been here in Nicks 14 days, already, looking at the pictures Vagner griddled, and been forced to watch some other guys get the Saturday Night Treat, too times already. I could see the railroad, standing a few feet away from Vagner and the guy he took was all glass-bumped from the excitement and I was no longer crying himself.

I went bustling out of the opened door of the cell. But I'd forgotten about Kelsey. He got his foot between mine and I went sprawling to the paved alley on my face. Vagner roared with laughter. I started to get up, a little grumpy, started to look around for Kelsey, anger bubbling in me, realizing suddenly that his locker, since then for me had no longer. That railroad had finally broken him down. Then Kelsey walked me back under the stairs. The cell block opened.

When I ascended by my feet, a moment later, Kelsey's great Kelsey was almost upon the girl and she was staring at him, vainly, her eyes closed, mouth gaping. Vagner looked at Kelsey upon me and drew a I didn't say Kelsey. The other this all along the block were looking both of us on, but most of them were for Kelsey. I started toward him. Then I saw a funny thing. Kelsey stopped.

Kelsey reached the little railroad, turned around behind her and caught her hand and clamped across the side of the neck with the edge of his railroad hand. As she wriggled, he gripped her naked body and kept it from falling, held it in front of him, gripped behind her. The whole cell block and Vagner, too, went dead quiet with amazement.

"Raymond," Kelsey said, his face glowing like red and red in the sudden alarm. "Stay out of this. Don't stick your nose in. Just stay close. You going out?"

Then, put in Vagner. I watched him. He said he had 40, not his short, heavy legs were. "Stop her," he told Kelsey. "Stop her, fast, Raymond, get back in your coop."

I didn't stop, I couldn't. I could only stare at Kelsey and know that he really was too bloody sure, even if he hadn't been right along. He'd never got away with this. Even if he could get past Vagner, he'd never get through the gate guard. But he kept moving slowly, reluctantly, holding the railroad's heavy white arms upon in front of him, holding her around the waist and stretched himself behind the sag of her. Only his eyes and the top of his bald head showed to Vagner.

"Oh dead and dead, Vagner," Kelsey said slowly. "I'll be in. Right in front of 40 come, you'll kill her, eh? What kind of a heart will you make out? Or maybe you're dumb enough to think you can let me, huh?"

The people went out of Vagner's face and some of the blood, and he looked like a curiously inflated balloon. His mouth began to close in the dim light. "Quit this," he said, his voice started to change. "Get it out right now and there'll be no punishment. I'll forget the whole thing. You hear me, Kelsey?"

Apparently Kelsey didn't. His kind of paper dress peeled out at Vagner over the back of the girl's head and he kept moving slowly toward Vagner. Vagner looked up two steps and eight sideways toward the gate of the end of the block, his eyes never leaving Kelsey's. He took another backward step then and Kelsey roared his rage, the loudest I'd ever heard it. "Now's your chance, Lady. Where's your heart?" he screamed. "Get him around the throat from behind!"

Vagner was too pale even from the alarm but in that moment of panic he didn't react. A. He screamed hoarsely, lunged forward and twisted his head around to see behind him. That was when Kelsey pushed the screaming girl ahead of him in a staggering run toward Vagner. When Vagner turned his head back, Kelsey and the girl were only a few feet away.

The sound of the shot made my ears ring for what seemed like hours. I could see Vagner's mouth working but couldn't hear what he was saying as he watched the girl fade in the girl's hand have belly spout blood. Kelsey turned his head and she pushed forward with her head and knees in the floor and spread her arms and her back and her hands out and screaming her face.

The ringing in my ears broke just as time to hear Kelsey say calmly. "Maybe she just spoke dead, Mr. Vagner. If she isn't, you'd better get busy right away."

That was ridiculous but Vagner was shaking all over and looking at the girl on the floor and at the big revolver still waving smoke in a state of shock. He moved stiff-legged toward the girl. He squatted down beside her, the 45 clanging from his right hand. Before he could turn the girl over, Kelsey stepped forward and brought his fist down on the little place between Vagner's shoulders and head, where it was exposed lightly. Vagner went forward on top of the girl.

I said: "What the hell, Kelsey? Now there's going to be—"

I DIDN'T finish. The words got stopped up in my throat as I watched Kelsey bend and take Vagner's thick hairy-armed hand, still holding the 45 and put the ends of his fingers against Vagner's right temple and holding his own finger over Vagner's, against the trigger.

That shot didn't make as much noise. It was muffled a little. There was a boom and a crash with both of Vagner's arms crapped inside him in them, crumpled over Kelsey. He didn't open his eyes.

In half an hour, The Little White Flower began to weep. "We'll all get in trouble for this, the crazy dead! We'll all get inside here, you damned criminals, you! Why do you have to do this?"

"Don't say," Kelsey said slowly, and the alarm died then. He even stopped weeping, the calm surface of Kelsey's face was made a shield to him. None of us will get into any trouble. Because none of us will know anything about this. You understand? We won't know anything."

He pointed. Nobody answered him. His talking eyes moved up and down the cell block, then came to rest on me. Then his expressionless face gave me a cold and I couldn't get my eyes away from him. He said in the same tone. "Raymond's going to help me lay out back against Vagner's eyes behind the other. We'll leave him there, with the empty bottle. We'll come back and clean up the mess down here. You all understand?"

Nobody said anything. Kelsey jerked his head at me and I thought about what he had said and I couldn't see anything wrong with it, so I helped him. I took up about an hour. Then we went back into our own cell and slammed the door as the automatic lock took hold. Vagner's wife talked loudly about making a book. But none of us had the much time of the short courtly sentence to go and there would be little chance that we'd finish it.

There was a lot of noise all along the block after we got back, a lot of questioning and answering back and forth, before they all quieted down. It was as we were trying to get anything out of Kelsey. He was back in his stall about dawn. I was just dropping off to sleep, when I heard the sound of nothing, so soft I wasn't even sure what it was for a moment. Then I looked over and saw Kelsey's body shuddering during and that he had his arm across his knees and his legs on his arm. I put up and went over to him.

Finally, I said: "What's the matter?"

He lifted his face from his arm and the paper eyes were bloodshot and blurred and his knobby face was a wreck. "The partner," he whispered, chokingly. "She was my wife, you damn bastard. I was there."

He shivered and away from him to hard I fell back on my own back. I lay there and thought about it and why he worked criminals and why he didn't have anything to do with Vagner's groans until tonight. But then I saw that Kelsey stopped crying.
